Membership: The Numbers Tell Our Story

Brethren,

Membership is the single greatest challenge facing Oklahoma Freemasonry today. It affects everything we do, from the strength of our local lodges to the financial stability of our Grand Lodge and our ability to serve our communities.

For years, we have discussed declining membership. Today, I want to share specific numbers that illustrate both the seriousness of our situation and the opportunities before us. There is encouraging news, but there are also difficult realities we cannot ignore.

Where We Stand Today

One year ago, Oklahoma Freemasonry had 14,225 members. Today, we have 13,653 members. That represents a net loss of 572 Master Masons in twelve months, or approximately 4.0% of our membership.

During the same period, we welcomed 396 new members. That is encouraging evidence that men continue to seek what Freemasonry offers. However, we also lost 605 brethren to death. Deaths alone exceeded new members by 209.

The Grand Lodge of OKLAHOMA

Our overall decline of 572 also reflects other membership changes. Suspensions, demits, restorations, affiliations, and any other adjustments must be reconciled before we can fully explain the total. Nevertheless, these figures show the scale of our challenge.

Membership indicator	Reported figure
Membership one year ago	14,225
Current membership	13,653
Net membership decline	572
Annual membership decline	4.02%
New members added	396
Deaths	605
Lodges one year ago	204
Current lodges	189
Net reduction in lodges	15

A Twenty-Six-Year Perspective

In 2000, Oklahoma Freemasonry counted 33,717 Master Masons. Today, we have 13,653—a decline of 20,064, or approximately 59.5%. Nearly three out of every five members represented in our membership total at the beginning of this century are no longer reflected in today's count.

In 2000, we raised 253 Master Masons. Our current figure of 396 new members is encouraging, although the two measures should not be treated as strictly identical without confirming the reporting definitions. Recruitment alone will not reverse the decline; we must also retain and restore brethren.

What Happens If We Do Nothing?

If the latest annual net decline of approximately 4.02% continues, our membership could fall below 10,000 within the next decade. These projections illustrate a constant-rate scenario, not predictions of what must happen.

Year	Projected membership
2026	13,653
2030	11,585
2035	9,442
2040	7,696
2045	6,272

The Loss of Our Lodges

One year ago, Oklahoma had 204 lodges. Today, we have 189—a net reduction of 15 lodges, or approximately 7.4%. Consolidations and closures have been persistent. More are anticipated. Only one Lodge remains in the Oklahoma panhandle area.

Every lodge represents more than a charter or building. It is a community of brethren, friendships, traditions, and service. We should strengthen struggling lodges before they reach the point where closure or consolidation becomes necessary. Our goal must be strong, active, meaningful Masonic communities.

The Encouraging News: Men Still Want Masonry

The addition of 396 new members shows men still want Masonry. Modern communication, including social media, offers an opportunity to introduce younger men to our principles and our fraternity. Our social media campaign is attracting men aged 45 and younger. They are drawn in large numbers because of a past positive experience with a relative who was a Mason.

But attracting a man is only the beginning. We must give him a reason to remain: mentorship, education, fellowship, purposeful work, and a genuine sense of belonging. A petition or degree alone does not measure our success.

Membership Is Everyone's Responsibility

The Grand Lodge provides leadership, resources, and direction, but the work happens in our constituent lodges. Every Worshipful Master, officer, and Master Mason has a role in welcoming candidates, mentoring Entered Apprentices and Fellow Crafts, engaging new Master Masons, contacting absent brethren, and restoring those who have drifted away.

A Renewed Commitment to Membership

Our strategy must address two objectives. First, we must open the door by introducing Freemasonry to good men across Oklahoma and communicating clearly what Masonry offers. Second, we must keep the door open from the inside. Retention requires meaningful education, quality degree work, fellowship, mentorship, and community involvement. I also believe we should seriously consider recognizing Entered Apprentices as members of our jurisdiction and supporting them throughout their Masonic journey.

Our Challenge Is Measurable

We know our membership is 13,653. We know we declined by 572 in one year, lost 605 brethren to death, added 396 new members, and now have 189 lodges rather than 204.

At a minimum, we must work toward a future in which new members and restorations consistently exceed deaths, suspensions, and demits. We must also strengthen lodges so fewer face closure or consolidation. This effort requires a sustained commitment—not a single campaign.

The Future Is Still Ours to Shape

I share these numbers not to discourage you, but because we cannot address a problem we are unwilling to measure.

We cannot continue losing hundreds of members each year and expect our jurisdiction to remain unchanged. Nor can we assume the next generation will discover Masonry without our deliberate effort.

Our challenge is not simply to slow the decline. It is to build a Fraternity that men want to join, that members want to remain part of, and that future generations will be proud to inherit.

The Choice Before Us

James Oates III
Deputy Grand Master

As my year serving as your Deputy Grand Master draws to a close, I have found myself reflecting on the many miles traveled, the countless hands shaken, and the conversations I have had with Brothers from every corner of Oklahoma. Those experiences have strengthened my conviction that our fraternity's future is bright—but it is not guaranteed.

The future of Freemasonry in Oklahoma will not be determined by changing demographics, economic conditions, or the challenges of modern society. Something far more powerful will determine it: the choices each of us makes every day.

Every Mason has a choice.

We can choose to attend our lodge or let someone else carry the load.

We can choose to mentor a new Brother, or assume someone else will do it.

We can choose to invite a good man to learn about Freemasonry, or lament that our membership is declining.

We can choose to encourage harmony or allow differences to divide us.

We can choose to leave our lodge better than we found it—or preserve the status quo.

None of these choices seems particularly significant on any given day. Yet over months and years, they become the legacy of a lodge and, ultimately, of our Grand Lodge.

Throughout this year, I have visited lodges of every size. I have seen buildings that reflect generations of sacrifice and commitment. More importantly, I have met Brothers whose love for our Craft remains as strong today as it was on the day they were raised. Their example reminds me that Freemasonry's strength has never depended solely on numbers. It has always depended upon committed men who understood that Masonry is not something we belong to—it is something we actively build.

Each generation inherits this fraternity from those who came before. The Brothers who preceded us erected our temples, established our charities, preserved our ritual, and entrusted us with an institution that has changed lives for generations. They fulfilled their responsibility.

Now it is our turn.

The question before us is not whether Freemasonry will change. Every generation experiences change. The real question is whether we will meet that change with courage, wisdom, and determination while remaining faithful to the timeless principles that define us.

If every Oklahoma Mason committed to mentoring one Brother, inviting one worthy man, serving his lodge faithfully, and living the values we profess, the future of our fraternity would be secure for generations to come.

The choice before us is not complicated.

Will we be spectators or builders?

As I conclude this year of service as your Deputy Grand Master, I sincerely thank you for the kindness, encouragement, and friendship you extended to Charlotte and me throughout our travels. Serving the Craft alongside you has been one of the greatest honors of my Masonic journey.

Titles and offices are temporary. Character, service, and influence endure.

May each of us choose to leave our lodge stronger, our Brothers encouraged, our communities improved, and our beloved fraternity worthy of those who will someday follow in our footsteps.

That is the choice before us. And that is a legacy worth leaving.

Celebrate Commitment

Brethren, I extend my heartfelt thanks for electing me to serve as your Junior Grand Warden. I am deeply grateful for the confidence you have placed in me and for the opportunity to serve our Grand Lodge in this capacity. This honor carries a responsibility that I take seriously, and I remain committed to serving the Craft with dedication, humility, and respect. Thank you for your support and for the privilege of being part of our fraternity's work.

It has been a pleasure to work with Most Worshipful Don Stanton and the other Trustees of our Grand Lodge this year. As I reflect on the year, I am thankful for the opportunity to contribute to our shared efforts on behalf of the Craft of Oklahoma.

The Lifelong Journey of a Master Mason

Craig Simon

Part I — The Master Mason Degree: Beginning, Not End

One of the most persistent misconceptions in Freemasonry is the idea that the Scottish Rite and York Rite confer "higher" degrees than the three degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry. The expression is common enough that we often use it without thinking about what it implies. Yet the terminology can unintentionally suggest that a man somehow graduates from the Blue Lodge or becomes a "higher" form of Mason by pursuing additional degrees.

That is not the philosophy of Freemasonry.

A Master Mason does not become more of a Mason by receiving additional degrees. The three degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry establish the foundation upon which every other Masonic experience is built. The Master Mason Degree is not a stopping point, nor is it simply one more step on a ladder. It is the beginning of a lifelong journey.

Preparation for the Journey

The Entered Apprentice and Fellowcraft Degrees are, in many respects, degrees of preparation. The Entered Apprentice is introduced to the fundamental obligations and expectations of a Mason. He begins the work of self-examination and moral improvement and learns that becoming a better man requires discipline, effort, and perseverance.

The Fellowcraft builds upon that foundation. He is encouraged to develop his intellect, pursue knowledge, and cultivate an appreciation for the liberal arts and sciences. He begins to understand that Masonry calls upon both the heart and the mind.

The first two degrees introduce the candidate to the principles and language of Freemasonry and prepare him for the profound lessons that follow. But then comes the Third Degree.

The Master Mason: The Beginning, Not the End

The Master Mason Degree is fundamentally different. Its lessons cannot be exhausted in one evening, nor can they be fully mastered in one lifetime. They must be revisited, contemplated, and lived.

The degree confronts the Mason with questions of faith, integrity, fidelity, service, leadership, mortality, hope, perseverance, and Brotherly Love. These are not merely lessons to be learned. They are virtues to be practiced.

A man does not finish becoming a Master Mason. He spends the rest of his life learning what it means to be one.

The completion of the Third Degree therefore does not mark the end of Masonic education. It marks the point at which the Mason assumes responsibility for continuing it. The degree gives him the tools, the principles, and the obligations; what he does with them for the remainder of his life is the real measure of his Masonic journey.

A Journey of Growth

Perhaps the best way to understand this journey is to imagine Masonic education not as a ladder, but as an inverted pyramid. The first two degrees establish the foundation, while the Master Mason Degree opens outward into a lifetime of growth.

As the years pass, a Mason can deepen his understanding of Masonic philosophy, history, and symbolism. He can develop greater spiritual and moral maturity, stronger bonds of brotherhood, greater leadership capacity, and a deeper commitment to service. Most importantly, he can continue the work of personal improvement that began when he first entered the Lodge.

That growth does not occur only in a lodge room.

A Mason grows when he serves as Worshipful Master and accepts the responsibility of leading his Lodge. He grows when he teaches a new Entered Apprentice or helps another Brother learn the ritual. He grows when he studies a degree he thought he already understood and discovers something new within its symbolism. He grows when he serves his community, supports a Brother in need, or accepts responsibility when the work is difficult. He grows not only through leadership, but also through humility.

Every one of these experiences contributes to the same objective: becoming a better Master Mason.

The Foundation Remains

A building may become larger and more complex, but it never outgrows the need for its foundation. The same is true of Freemasonry.

Every Mason enters the Craft through a Lodge. Every Mason receives the three degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry. The lessons and obligations received there remain the foundation upon which every subsequent Masonic experience is built.

The Lodge is therefore not merely the place where a Mason begins his Masonic career before moving on to something greater. It is the place to which his Masonic journey continually returns. It is where he meets his Brothers, practices the principles he has been taught, teaches those who follow him, and demonstrates whether the lessons of Freemasonry have become part of his character.

The Blue Lodge is not the beginning of Masonry that a man eventually leaves behind. It is the foundation and continuing center of his Masonic life.

And perhaps that is the most important distinction to remember. The goal of Freemasonry is not to move a man beyond the Master Mason Degree, but to help him become a better Master Mason.

That raises an important question: if the Master Mason Degree is the foundation and the beginning of a lifelong journey, where do the Scottish Rite, York Rite, and other Masonic organizations fit?

That will be the subject of Part II.

Why Your Attendance at the Special Grand Lodge Session Matters

It has been an honor to serve another year as your Grand Secretary. Thank you for the trust you have shown in the staff and me. I hope we have met your expectations, and if not, please let us know how we can improve our service.

For this issue of The Oklahoma Mason, I want to talk about why attending our Annual Grand Lodge Session matters, especially this year. We have a great deal of work ahead, including 25 resolutions that could affect how Grand Lodge and our constituent lodges operate.

Under Section 301 C of the Constitution and Uniform Code, Grand Master Don Stanton has called a Special Grand Lodge Session for 1:30 p.m. on Friday, November 13. He aims to bring as much proposed legislation to the floor as time will allow. Any business that is not completed Friday will continue Saturday morning at the usual time.

The Registration Committee will begin registering delegates at 1:30 p.m. on Thursday, November 12, in the Atrium of the Guthrie Scottish Rite Temple. Please bring your current 2026 dues card and any proxies you are carrying so the committee can verify them. Registering Thursday will help reduce delays on Friday and will give the Grand Lodge office an early count of the lodges represented.

That count is important because we must have a quorum before Grand Lodge can legally conduct the business for which the Special Session was called. If your lodge is not represented, its members will have no voice in the decisions made during the session. Every registered lodge helps the Craft exercise its right to govern itself through its delegates and proxies.

During the Friday and Saturday sessions, Grand Lodge members will consider proposed changes to the Constitution and Uniform Code, elect Grand Lodge Officers, and choose members of the Grand Lodge Library and Museum Board and the Masonic Charity Foundation of Oklahoma. Every Oklahoma lodge should make plans now to be represented.

The 25 resolutions cover the rules by which Grand Lodge and our lodges conduct their work. Some of the proposals may seem technical at first, but they can affect lodge administration, officer duties, member rights, elections, reporting, discipline, and other parts of lodge life. This issue includes more information about the resolutions and the candidates for the offices and boards to be filled.

Please read the proposed legislation before coming to Guthrie. Talk it over with the members of your lodge, listen carefully to the discussion at Grand Lodge, and vote according to your best judgment. Our laws deserve careful study before we change them. When delegates are prepared and take part in the debate, the final decisions reflect the views of lodges throughout Oklahoma. When a lodge is absent, its members give up that opportunity.

We will also elect Grand Lodge Officers. These men will accept major responsibilities for leading and administering our Grand Lodge. Before voting, consider each candidate's character, experience, judgment, and service record. These elections are never a mere formality. The officers we choose will be trusted with the fraternity's welfare and will work with lodges and members across the state.

The elections for the Grand Lodge Library and Museum Board and the Masonic Charity Foundation of Oklahoma also deserve close attention. The Library and Museum Board preserves the records, objects, and history of Oklahoma Masonry. The Masonic Charity Foundation supports charitable work that improves lives across our state. Members of both boards must understand their duties, attend faithfully, and use sound judgment.

Of course, Grand Lodge is about more than meetings and votes. It gives Masons from every part of Oklahoma time to visit face to face, renew friendships, exchange ideas, and learn from one another. A conversation in the hallway or over a meal may give you an idea that helps your lodge improve attendance, manage its finances, serve its community, or better care for its members. That fellowship is still one of the best reasons to attend.

Masonic vendors will also be on hand with jewelry, regalia, and other items. Official Grand Lodge of Oklahoma shirts, caps, and merchandise will also be available. This gathering is a good opportunity to find lodge supplies, officer items, gifts, or Masonic merchandise that may not be available near home.

Please begin planning now. Confirm that your delegates or proxies can attend, review the registration requirements, and make travel arrangements early. The Scottish Rite Inn will have a limited number of rooms available. If possible, register Thursday afternoon and avoid the Friday rush. Each lodge should also have a backup plan in case a delegate becomes ill or cannot attend. The Grand Lodge office will be glad to help prepare proxy forms when another member must serve. An unfilled vacancy or missed registration could keep us from reaching a quorum.

Worshipful Masters and Secretaries, please explain why this session matters to your members. Encourage them to study the resolutions and talk with their delegates. Members who understand the work before Grand Lodge are more likely to stay involved after the votes are counted. Our system works best when lodges participate, and their representatives arrive informed and ready to serve.

The Grand Lodge of Oklahoma belongs to its constituent lodges and their members. Its strength comes from lodges taking part when important decisions must be made. Please ensure your lodge is represented, your delegates are registered, and your members know what we're considering. With a quorum and informed delegates, we can complete the work before us and make sound decisions for Oklahoma Masonry.

I look forward to seeing you in Guthrie. Please let me or any member of the Grand Lodge office staff know how we can make your visit more useful and enjoyable. We are here to help. While you are here, take a few minutes to visit with your Grand Lodge Officers and the office staff. Each of these men, and of course Karen, is committed to serving the Craft. Please let them know you appreciate their work.

Second, I do believe our strategic investment in the missions of other community non-profits is important for visibility .across Oklahoma.*
